

Impressions of an Average Juryman (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Impressions of an Average Juryman The working of a jurymans mind is the unknown quantity, the missing link, in the trial of legal cases. Lawyers may have access to magnificent libraries, may have legal and other experts available for consultation at all times, but they cannot have a knowledge of who is to make up a jury to pass upon the facts in a case, or how counsels efforts are to be received by a jury. Long experience in jury cases may give an attorney some vague idea of what he may expect from the average jury, but each jury has individual characteristics and it is not possible to judge with even a fair degree of certainty how the eat is going to jump. The writer has been serving as a juror in the New York civil and criminal courts for about eighteen years and has heard a wide variety of cases tried.
